

Bay Area real estate, answered.

63 questions Bay Area buyers and sellers actually ask, answered honestly.

Closing costs · CalHFA · insurance · disclosures · HOAs · the NAR settlement · and more.

You have questions. Here are 63 honest answers.

These are the questions Bay Area buyers and sellers actually ask me: about commissions, programs, closing costs, escrow, insurance, disclosures, HOAs, Prop 13, Mello-Roos, wildfire risk, and what a good agent should be doing for you.

Read the sections that apply to you.

The 63 questions in this guide are organized into fifteen categories. Costs & Commissions covers what the 2024 NAR settlement actually changed, and Closing Costs & Escrow walks through transfer taxes, title insurance, and what escrow really does. Financing & Programs covers CalHFA Dream for All, the Forgivable Equity Builder Loan, what self-employed and immigrant buyers should know, and down payments. The Buying Process and The Selling Process cover the mechanics, and Preparing to List adds timing, pre-listing inspections, disclosure duty, and staging.

HOAs & Condos and Bay Area Specifics cover dues, reserves, special assessments, ADUs, and inspection red flags. Bay Area Tax & Compliance covers Prop 13, Mello-Roos, the SB326 balcony law, the supplemental tax bill, and wildfire and flood disclosure. Home Insurance and Refinancing & Home Equity cover the 2026 insurance reset, cash-out refinancing, and recasts. Understanding Disclosures explains the TDS, the SPQ, and when to call a real-estate attorney. Special Transactions covers FSBOS, solar ownership, Prop 19, and inherited homes. Trust & Ethics covers what an agent should be willing to do for you, and About & Contact tells you how to reach me.

Most of what's in here is what I would tell you in person. The difference is that on the page, you can read it twice. Or hand it to your spouse. Or come back to it three months from now when the question becomes timely.

COSTS & COMMISSIONS

2 QUESTIONS

How much does a buyer's agent cost in California?

In most Bay Area transactions, the buyer's agent is paid by the seller out of the sale proceeds at closing, so buyers typically pay no out-of-pocket commission. Following the 2024 NAR settlement, this is now formalized through a buyer-representation agreement signed before showings, which spells out exactly how the agent is compensated. Lily reviews this agreement plainly with every client before any home tour. In practice she treats it as a formality, not a binding leash: if the fit isn't right, you walk away, because the long-term relationship matters more than any single transaction.

What if I want to terminate my buyer's agent contract?

California buyer-representation agreements typically include termination provisions. Most agents will release a client who is unsatisfied: fighting over commission while still in the search phase is rare and usually ends badly for the agent's reputation. Lily's agreements are written for transparency: clear duration, clear scope, clear release terms.

CLOSING COSTS & ESCROW

4 QUESTIONS

How much are closing costs in the Bay Area?

A common rule of thumb on the buyer side is roughly 2% to 5% of the purchase price, but that is a planning range, not a quote. The actual figure depends on the city, the lender, and the specific property. The reliable number comes from the escrow officer and your lender once the home and loan are known, so confirm it before you write an offer.

What is a city transfer tax, and who pays it?

A city transfer tax is a one-time tax some Bay Area cities charge when a property changes hands, on top of the standard county documentary transfer tax. Cities that levy one include Berkeley, San Francisco, Oakland, Hayward, Richmond, San Leandro, Alameda, and Albany, while most Bay Area cities charge none at all. Who pays it (the buyer, the seller, or a split) is negotiated in the purchase contract, not fixed by law, and the current rate should be confirmed by escrow and title for the specific city.

What does escrow actually do?

Escrow is a neutral third party that holds the funds and documents during a sale and closes only when every condition in the contract has been met. Your money does not reach the seller until the terms are satisfied, which protects both sides. If the contract requires something like a repair before closing, escrow will not release funds until it is done, which makes the contract's promises enforceable.

Is title insurance worth it?

Title insurance protects your ownership against defects that surface after the sale closes, such as an unpaid lien or a hidden claim missed during the title search. The title company also produces the clean-title certification your lender requires before funding the loan. The premium is a one-time closing cost, and for most buyers the protection it provides over the life of ownership makes it worthwhile.

FINANCING & PROGRAMS

8 QUESTIONS

What programs help first-time homebuyers in California?

California offers several first-time buyer assistance programs: California Forgivable Equity Builder Loan (up to 10% of purchase price, forgiven after 5 years), Dream for All (shared-appreciation loan), and CalHFA programs covering down payment and closing costs. Most have AMI thresholds and minimum credit-score requirements, so a free consultation is the first step.

What is the California Forgivable Equity Builder Loan?

The California Forgivable Equity Builder Loan provides first-time homebuyers with up to 10% of the home's purchase price toward down payment or closing costs. The loan is fully forgiven after 5 years of using the property as a primary residence. Eligibility: income below 80% of Area Median Income (~$106,880 for the Bay Area), minimum 640 credit score.

What is the California Dream for All program and how do I apply?

California Dream for All is a CalHFA shared-appreciation loan that helps first-time buyers cover down payment and closing costs. The state contributes funds in exchange for a share of future appreciation when sold or refinanced. Application periods open in limited windows (most recent: February 24 to March 16, 2026) and funds typically run out within weeks. Lily helps buyers get pre-approved with a CalHFA-listed lender ahead of the next window.

Can I buy a home in California right after immigrating to the US?

Yes. Recent immigrants and visa holders (H-1B, L-1, O-1, EAD, green card in process) can buy a home in California. Most lenders prefer 2 years of US credit history for conventional loans, but ITIN and foreign-national programs exist for buyers without SSN or short credit history. Lily works with lenders specializing in immigrant transactions and helps build a path to purchase even before permanent-resident status.

The bank told me I don't qualify. Is that final?

Usually not. A "no" often means one box did not fit, not that the whole market has no product for you, so have your file reviewed by a lender or broker with access to more than one program. Self-employed and newcomer buyers in particular are frequently a fit for portfolio or non-QM programs the first bank never mentioned.

I'm self-employed and write off expenses. Can I still get a mortgage?

Often yes, through a bank-statement loan, a type of non-QM (non-qualified mortgage) loan that uses your bank deposits rather than tax returns to gauge income. According to a licensed lender, these carry a higher down payment and rate than a conforming loan, but for many business owners the annual tax savings still outweigh the cost.

How much do I need for a down payment?

It depends on the program and your profile. According to a licensed lender, a well-documented W-2 buyer may have access to low down-payment options, while bank-statement, asset-based, and foreign-national programs ask for more down in exchange for their flexibility. The specifics are set by a licensed lender, not by a Realtor.

Can I use my RSU stock grants to qualify for a Bay Area mortgage?

Most California lenders consider RSU (Restricted Stock Unit) income for mortgage qualifying with documented evidence: typically two years of vest history, a forward vest schedule signed by your employer, and a stock-price stability assessment. Lenders use a two-year average of vested RSU value, not the unvested forward schedule. ISO and NSO option income is treated more conservatively (often discounted 30-50% or excluded). Bay Area tech-buyer mechanics: time the offer to a vesting window, plan a 12-week pre-approval, and don't sell RSU shares before the lender confirms they aren't needed as

THE BUYING PROCESS

5 QUESTIONS

Is now a good time to buy a home in the Bay Area?

The 2025-2026 Bay Area market is a "split market": some neighborhoods see multiple offers above asking, others require price reductions. Buyers have meaningful negotiating leverage in segments they did not have for over a decade. Whether it's the right time depends on your finances, target neighborhood, and time horizon, not on a generic market call.

Should I wait for prices to drop?

The Bay Area's chronic inventory shortage and rigorous lending standards distinguish today's market from 2008. A meaningful price drop across the entire region requires either a recession or a wave of new construction, neither imminent. Specific neighborhoods may see corrections; others won't. The right answer depends on your scenario, not on a general market forecast.

What's the difference between a buyer's agent and a listing agent?

A buyer's agent represents the buyer and owes a fiduciary duty to advocate for the buyer's interests: negotiating price, reviewing disclosures, identifying risks. A listing agent represents the seller in reverse. The two should never be the same person in the same transaction (called "dual agency") unless the buyer fully understands the conflict.

How long does it take to close on a home in California?

A typical Bay Area home purchase closes in 21 to 30 days from accepted offer, with cash offers sometimes closing in as little as 7 to 14 days. Loan-financed purchases can extend to 30 to 45 days depending on the lender. Lily manages timelines tightly and coordinates with lenders, escrow, inspectors, and appraisers to keep contingencies on track.

Can Lily help me find off-market homes in the Bay Area?

Yes. Lily maintains a curated off-market network through Centermac Realty and her broker relationships across the Bay Area, surfacing homes before they hit MLS, Coming Soon, Pocket Listings, and Off-Market opportunities. Subscribe at lilygaripova.com/off-market/ (English) or /ru/off-market/ (Russian).

THE SELLING PROCESS

3 QUESTIONS

How should I price my home in the Bay Area in 2026?

In the 2025-2026 split market, pricing strategy depends on neighborhood-specific comps, days-on-market trends, school district, condition, and current competition. Lily practices the Strategic Listing Model: data-driven pricing with managed competitive bidding rather than overpriced listings that sit. Example: her Springer Way listing in San Jose was priced at $1,588,000 and sold for $1,800,000, a $212,000 premium.

What does Lily do as a listing agent?

As a listing agent, Lily executes a three-phase Strategic Listing Model: (1) data-driven pricing with comparable analysis and competitive mapping; (2) home preparation including pre-listing improvements with positive ROI, professional staging, and photography; (3) multi-platform marketing with active bid management to extract maximum buyer competition.

How long does it take to sell a Bay Area home?

Total time from listing decision to close typically runs 45 to 60 days: roughly 1 to 2 weeks for prep, 1 to 4 weeks active on market (the first 7 to 14 days drive most offers), and 21 to 30 days in escrow after offer acceptance.

PREPARING TO LIST

5 QUESTIONS

When is the best time to list my Bay Area home?

In a normal year, March and April are typically the most active months, with the largest pool of serious buyers shopping at once. January and February ramp up toward that peak, and December is usually the quietest month. After June, summer vacations thin the buyer pool, so a home listed then can sit longer. These are general seasonal patterns, not guarantees, since rates and inventory move the market.

Why do Bay Area sellers inspect before listing?

You are not required to, but in the Bay Area many sellers pay upfront for a termite, roof, and general home inspection (plus a pool inspection if there is a pool). In a normal or cooled market, buyers tend to hesitate on a home with no inspection package because they assume something is being hidden, so disclosing early often produces cleaner, faster offers.

Do I have to fix everything the inspection finds?

No. You are never required to repair every item in the report. You can fix what matters, disclose the rest, or hand buyers the full report and let them factor it into their offer. The report gives you choices; it does not dictate them.

What am I required to disclose as a seller?

In California, sellers must disclose known material facts: the things that would matter to a reasonable buyer, such as known defects and past problems. This is a legal area, so confirm your specific obligations with a real-estate attorney rather than relying on a general summary.

Do I really need staging?

Often, yes. Staging is furnishing and styling the home so it shows and photographs at its best, and since most buyers meet a home on a screen first, presentation drives interest. Every home is different, so whether and how much to stage is a judgment call worth making with your agent.

HOAS & CONDOS

4 QUESTIONS

Are HOA dues included in my mortgage payment?

No. HOA dues are a separate monthly charge that sits on top of your mortgage, property taxes, and insurance. Budget for them as a permanent line item, because they will outlast your loan.

What is a healthy reserve fund level?

Reserve specialists generally treat 70% funded and above as healthy, but many Bay Area associations sit below that, so there is no single number that means pass or fail. Read it directionally: the lower the funding, the higher the risk of a future special assessment. The reserve study in the document package gives you the figure.

Can I be charged a special assessment as a new owner?

Yes. A special assessment is billed to whoever owns the unit when it is levied, so if one passes shortly after you close, it is yours. This is exactly why the board meeting minutes and any pending assessments in the disclosure package matter so much before you buy.

Will an HOA affect my loan?

It can. Some loans require a condo building to be "warrantable," and a building in active litigation, mid-renovation, or with a thin reserve can fail that test and limit your options. Confirm the specifics with a licensed lender early in your search.

BAY AREA SPECIFICS

3 QUESTIONS

What are common home inspection red flags in Bay Area homes?

Common Bay Area inspection red flags vary by housing era: pre-1978 homes may have lead paint and asbestos; 1990s-era plumbing may use defective CPVC; older homes often need foundation/seismic retrofits; ADUs and bonus rooms are frequently unpermitted (Lily recently saved a Campbell buyer $100K when due-diligence revealed an unpermitted ADU).

What is an ADU and does it add value to a home?

An ADU (Accessory Dwelling Unit) is a secondary living unit on a residential property, often a converted garage, basement, or detached structure with a kitchen, bathroom, and bedroom. Permitted ADUs add legal living square footage and can generate rental income; unpermitted ADUs can be a six-figure liability if discovered after purchase. California's 2025 ADU grandfathering rules made legalization easier but still costly.

How do I know if the listing agent is hiding something?

The listing agent isn't lying when they pass along seller statements: that's their job. Verifying whether what the seller said is actually true is not their job. If you're buying, this work falls on your side or it doesn't get done. Recent example: Lily was on a $2.5M Campbell deal where the listing agent confirmed the ADU was "permitted." A 5-minute call to the City of Campbell revealed it wasn't. The next day a city inspector red-tagged the property, saving Lily's buyer $100K in renegotiation.

BAY AREA TAX & COMPLIANCE

7 QUESTIONS

How does California's Proposition 13 affect my Bay Area home purchase?

Proposition 13 caps annual increases in your property's assessed value at 2% per year, regardless of market appreciation. Practical effect: a $1.5M Bay Area purchase today gets reassessed at full price, while the previous owner who bought in the 1990s paid taxes on an assessment far below current market value. Your initial property tax bill runs roughly 1.25% of the purchase price (about $18,750/year on $1.5M), plus Mello-Roos and special assessments where applicable. Inheriting a Prop-13-protected home transfers some of that benefit under Prop 19, but with significant new restrictions since 2021.

What is the supplemental tax bill?

It is a separate, one-time catch-up bill issued after you buy. When your assessment re-bases to your purchase price, the supplemental bill covers the gap between the seller's old assessed value and your new, higher basis for the part of the fiscal year you owned the home. It is in addition to your regular property tax bill, and it commonly arrives 6 to 18 months after closing, so set cash aside for it.

Does my mortgage escrow pay the supplemental bill?

Often it does not. An impound or escrow account is set up to cover your regular property taxes and insurance, and the one-time supplemental bill frequently comes directly to you instead. Plan to pay it out of pocket, and check with your lender and county so you are not caught off guard.

Does remodeling raise my property taxes?

It can, but usually not by resetting your whole assessment. New construction generally adds only the assessed value of the improvement itself to your existing assessment, rather than re-basing the entire property to today's market value. Routine repairs and maintenance typically do not change your assessment at all; your county assessor draws the line.

What is Mello-Roos and which Bay Area neighborhoods have it?

Mello-Roos is a special property-tax district layered on top of the standard 1.25% property tax to fund infrastructure (roads, schools, parks) in new-construction tracts. It can add $5,000 to $15,000+ per year. Active Bay Area locations: new tracts in Dublin (Boulevard), San Ramon (Windemere, Gale Ranch), Tracy, Mountain House, and Brentwood new-construction subdivisions. Bonds typically run 25 to 40 years from issuance. Always pull the preliminary title report and check for Mello-Roos line items before writing an offer; most buyers discover them too late.

What is California's SB326 balcony law and how does it affect condo and townhome buyers?

SB326 (the California Balcony Inspection Law, enacted around 2019) requires multi-family residential buildings with elevated wood-framed balconies, decks, and walking surfaces to undergo a structural inspection by a qualified professional. The first inspection deadline for condominium associations has already passed, with re-inspection required on a recurring multi-year (roughly nine-year) cycle after that; because that first deadline is behind us, many associations are completing inspections and calling special assessments right now. Exact requirements differ by building and can change, so confirm a building's status with a qualified real-estate attorney.

How can I check a Bay Area home's wildfire and flood risk before making an offer?

Pull three independent sources before writing an offer: (1) CAL FIRE's Fire Hazard Severity Zone map (returns Very High, High, Moderate, or Low classification by address); (2) FEMA's flood-zone map (returns Zone A, AE, X, and similar designations); (3) AB-38 defensible-space requirements if the property is in a state-defined Wildland-Urban Interface. In late 2025 Zillow removed its climate-risk scores from listings; whether any given listing site shows wildfire or flood risk can change, so the reliable check is to

HOME INSURANCE

3 QUESTIONS

Why is home insurance harder to get in California now?

Several years of wildfire losses led many carriers to stop writing or renewing policies in higher-risk parts of the state, pushing some homeowners onto the California FAIR Plan, the state's insurer of last resort. A 2026 regulatory deal brought private carriers back in exchange for higher rates and broader coverage, but availability is still uneven. Lily is a Realtor, not an insurance agent, so take the specifics to a licensed insurance agent.

Does homeowners insurance cover earthquakes or floods?

No. A standard homeowners policy excludes both, which are covered by separate policies. Given California's seismic risk, this is worth discussing with a licensed insurance agent rather than assuming you are covered.

When should I get an insurance quote when buying?

As early as you can, ideally before you write the offer and at the latest before you remove your loan contingency. In the current market a carrier can decline a property after inspection, so quoting early tells you the real cost in time to shape your offer and keeps an exit if the home turns out uninsurable. It matters most on wildfire-exposed and older homes.

REFINANCING & HOME EQUITY

3 QUESTIONS

Does a cash-out refinance change my interest rate?

Yes, it can. It replaces your old loan with a new, larger one that carries whatever rate is available when you refinance, which may be higher or lower than your current rate. A licensed lender can tell you what rate you would actually get.

Can I lower my monthly payment without refinancing?

Often, yes, through a loan recast. You deposit a lump sum toward your principal, the lender recalculates your payment downward over the remaining schedule, and your interest rate stays the same. There is usually a modest fee and a minimum deposit, and not every loan is eligible, so confirm with your loan servicer or a licensed lender.

Are those "refinance now" letters from my bank legitimate?

Usually not. Because mortgages are recorded in public county records, third parties can imitate your bank using your address and lender's name, and the advertised rate is typically bait. Call your loan servicer using the number on your statement, or a licensed lender you trust, never the number on the letter.

SPECIAL TRANSACTIONS

7 QUESTIONS

What should I know before buying or selling a Bay Area FSBO?

California FSBO (For Sale By Owner) transactions skip the listing agent but still require strict adherence to state disclosure law: complete Transfer Disclosure Statement, Natural Hazard Disclosure, lead-based paint disclosure for pre-1978 homes, Megan's Law notice, and water-heater, smoke-alarm, and CO-detector compliance. Three gotchas that derail California FSBOs: (1) verbal modification of fully-executed contracts; (2) unsigned counter-offers without proper paperwork trail; (3) missing required statutory disclosures. If you have an active buyer-rep agreement and want to pursue a FSBO, the agreement's exit clause should address how representation works for an off-MLS property.

How do I evaluate a Bay Area home with existing solar panels?

Solar panels come with one of four very different ownership structures: (1) Owned outright panels transfer free at close. (2) Leased you inherit a 20-year contract you can't easily cancel; the lender may require subordination or payoff. (3) PPA (Power Purchase Agreement) you buy electricity from the panels at a fixed rate; contracts typically run 20+ years. (4) PACE (Property Assessed Clean Energy) financing attached to the property tax bill as a senior lien; many conventional lenders won't fund a purchase with active PACE unless paid off at close. Pull the preliminary title report: the panel-ownership structure shows up in disclosures or as a lien.

How does Proposition 19 affect inheriting a Bay Area home?

Prop 19 (effective February 2021) significantly tightened the rules for inheriting property with low Prop-13-protected assessed value. Before Prop 19, a child could inherit a parent's home at the parent's old assessed value. After Prop 19, the inherited home keeps the low assessed value only if the child uses it as a primary residence AND the family-home exclusion applies; even then, the portion of market value above the old assessed value plus $1M is partially reassessed. Rent out or sell an inherited home within a few years and you trigger reassessment at full market value, often $10,000 to $30,000+ added to the annual tax bill. Centermac Realty's broker-of-record is also a licensed real estate attorney; estate-context transactions go to him first.

What documents should I assemble before listing my Bay Area home?

A complete house binder measurably moves the offer-price needle and reduces transaction friction. Bay Area sellers should compile: (1) original purchase paperwork plus the title report; (2) all permits ever pulled from the city building department; (3) major-renovation receipts, warranties, and contractor contacts; (4) seismic-retrofit certifications if applicable; (5) recent appliance manuals and service records; (6) roof and HVAC service history; (7) tree-service and arborist records (Oakland has levied six-figure fines for unpermitted tree removal); (8) HOA documents if applicable; (9) solar-panel ownership paperwork; (10) any pending insurance claims. A complete binder signals organized ownership, supports the listing-strategy pricing, and answers buyer due-diligence questions before they become contract contingencies.

Can I sell an inherited home before probate is finished?

It depends on the path. If the home was in a living trust, the successor trustee can usually sell without probate at all. If it is going through probate, the sale generally has to wait until the court appoints someone with authority to act for the estate, and it may need to follow the court's process. Your estate attorney is the one who confirms what is possible and when.

Will I owe a large capital-gains tax if I sell an inherited home?

Often less than people fear, because of the stepped-up basis: inherited property's basis generally resets to its value at the date of death, so the taxable gain is measured from that higher number rather than the original purchase price. Sell close to that value soon after inheriting and the gain can be small. If instead you keep the home as a rental or second home, Prop 19

UNDERSTANDING DISCLOSURES

3 QUESTIONS

What is a disclosure packet in a California home sale?

The disclosure packet is the collection of documents a seller and the transaction provide to a buyer about the property's condition, history, and known issues. In a typical Bay Area sale it often runs 200 to 300 pages and includes the seller's own statements, a third-party natural-hazard report, and the buyer's inspection reports. You usually receive it during the inspection window, the limited period when you investigate the home and can still withdraw, so reading it carefully on time matters.

What is the difference between the TDS and the SPQ?

The Transfer Disclosure Statement (TDS) is the seller's core written statement about the property's condition and known problems. The Seller Property Questionnaire (SPQ) is a companion form with more detailed questions about repairs, alterations, disputes, and history, and it supplements the TDS. Both are the seller's own representations, so the most useful approach is to read them together and against the inspection reports.

Can my real-estate agent give me legal advice about disclosures?

No. A real-estate agent is not a lawyer and cannot give you a legal interpretation of your disclosures or contract. A careful agent can read the packet methodically, explain what each document is, and flag gaps for you to investigate. For an actual legal opinion, including when you see signs of concealment, a dispute over what was disclosed, or anything touching title or contract remedies, consult a real-estate attorney.

TRUST & ETHICS

3 QUESTIONS

Will Lily talk me out of buying a home if she finds problems?

Yes. Lily practices what her clients call the "Ethics of No": she will recommend walking away from a property when inspections, disclosures, or contract terms reveal risks that compromise long-term financial security. This is documented across her Zillow reviews as one of the most-cited reasons clients trust her. Result: more transactions take longer, but very few become regrets.

Does Lily Garipova speak Russian?

Yes. Lily is fluent in English and speaks Russian as her native language. She represents Russian-speaking buyers, sellers, and investors across the Bay Area with all paperwork, negotiation, and inspection review available in either language. Russian-language website: lilygaripova.com/ru.

Why would I want a Russian-speaking agent if I speak English fine?

Real estate documents are dense, 100 to 300+ pages per transaction, and the technical vocabulary doesn't translate cleanly. An agent who works in Russian at the document-review level can explain financial and legal implications in your native language while still negotiating fluently with the English-speaking other side. The difference between "translates at showings" and "works in English and Russian at every step" is the difference between feeling lost and feeling protected.

ABOUT LILY & CONTACT

3 QUESTIONS

I'm relocating to the Bay Area: can Lily help me find a home remotely?

Yes. Lily works regularly with clients relocating from out of state and abroad, including from New York, the Pacific Northwest, Texas, Southern California, and internationally. She offers virtual tours, FaceTime walkthroughs, neighborhood comparisons, and remote document execution. Russian-speaking clients relocating from CIS countries get full support in English and Russian.

What areas does Lily Garipova serve?

The entire San Francisco Bay Area: East Bay (Oakland, Fremont, Hayward, Castro Valley, Union City), Contra Costa (Concord, Walnut Creek, Danville, San Ramon, Pleasanton, Martinez), South Bay (San Jose, Santa Clara, Sunnyvale, Cupertino, Mountain View, Milpitas, Campbell), Silicon Valley (Palo Alto, Los Altos, Menlo Park, Atherton, Redwood City), Peninsula (Saratoga, Los Gatos), San Francisco, Pacifica, and Marin County.
